

Position: Conservation Scientist/Mongolia Program Director

Company overview: Round River Conservation Studies provides deep technical expertise and long-standing partnership relationships to drive effective landscape-scale conservation efforts across the globe through scientific research, educational programs, and community partnerships.

Responsibilities:

- Assist with project partner formation and consultation, objective conceptualization, methodology development, funding procurement, and communications of project necessities and results.
- Build science capacity and infrastructure internally and externally.
- Assist the Conservation Director, Community Programs Director, and Student Programs Director.
- Develop program- and project-specific proposals, work plans, and funding strategies.
- Synthesize information from diverse sources to develop well-rounded conservation approaches blending social, ecological, and financial perspectives.
- Senior leader and instructor for Mongolia student program. As needed, coordinate logistics, assist staff, interns, and student program leaders to ensure tasks progress as organizational demands require.
- Provide oversight on data management for all student programs. Assist with communicating project findings in various scientific and nonscientific written outlets, including peer-reviewed journals, blogs, articles, and other media.
- Communicate project findings orally in a range of scientific and non-scientific outlets, including conferences, workshops, planning sessions, and other events.
- Facilitate network development and relationships with a variety of partners and across international projects. Perform all other related duties as assigned.

Qualifications: Must have a master's degree in environmental science or a related field.
